VOSA to stop more vehicles

VOSA will be able to stop more vehicles under new powers coming into force in April that give the agency increasing independence from the police.

Currently, VOSA can only independently stop drivers if they suspect a fault with the vehicle. Under the new powers to stop rules, VOSA roadside enforcement officers will be able to stop a vehicle to check drivers' hour's compliance, overloading or paperwork.

"The legal requirements under which VOSA makes a roadside stop will be more straightforward and may save time as officers will not be required to make a roadworthiness check before checking drivers' paperwork," says James Firth, Freight Transport Association head of road freight and enforcement policy.

The new rules will be extended to Northern Ireland through the DVA (Driver and Vehicle Agency).
